	8	NOTE: According to the Dict. of Nat. Biogr. Eng. Pub. A, v.34, p.7, Llewelyn, the above
	9	husband was only 12 years of age when his partisans began to molest Dafydd ap Owain. This took place in 1176 or shortly thereafter. On page 13 of the same source it
	10	states that no trust can be placed in the statement in the romance of Fulk Fitzwarin that after Joan's death Llewelyn married Eva Fitzwarine.
	11	The statement that Joan was the daughter of Agatha, dau. of Robert, Earl of Ferrers, rests upon no known authority (Eng. Pub. A, v.29, p.388)
	12	In the Dict. of Nat. Biogr. it indicates that the daughters of Llewelyn by the name of Gwladys and Margaret may have been daughters by Joan. Because of the
	13	probable period of time in which Margaret lived and was married she is arbitrarily placed with this couple; however, in the case of Gwladys, it is known she was probably
	14	married to Reginal de Braose as early as 1215, it is therefore presumed she would be more likely to be a daughter by Tanglwyst. She could have been married to Reginald
	15	de Braose as a child, since she had no children by him, but there is no direct evidence that such a child marriage took place. She was previously sealed to this couple in 7 May 1915, and shown as being born about 1208.
